O! fair was her form as it floated along, And brightly the rainbow glanced forth from the spray; And the waves seemed to murmur an eloquent song, As they fell neath her footsteps and vanished away. Hope tended her pathway, and Peace followed near; There was joy all around her, and glory above-Arid the eye that beheld her, though dimmed with a tear, Grew bright neath the glance of the Goddess of Love! And thus from the waves of the Ocean of Life, Love rises, in beauty and gladness, to throw Her charm o er the waters of sorrow and strife, And spread o er their darkness her beautiful bow. The sorrows that darken, the passions that blight, Each hope and each feeling, all yield to her sway; And the brow that would else have been shrouded in night, Is blight with the radiance that beams on her way! Such was my dream. And as I woke With sudden start, the spell that bound me, At once, like some fair mirror broke And left its shining fragments round me. But on their surface I could trace Glimpses of truth, so brightly shining, That they may fitly claim a place In this the wreath that I am twining For the bright memories, which to-day In every bosom move and play! And what would life be, were it not For this strange instinct from above, Which, from the waves of every lot Calls forth the radiant...
