And at this final gathering-place Two ways divide the human race; Here at this parting of the ways All journeying souls must halt and list, To hear the distant bugle notes From Elysian Heights or Stygian Depths; And every soul will catch the tone That calls it to its destined zone. Here leads a steep and narrow way, Where neither knave nor fool would stray; It beckons those who neer despised The wisdom of the lettered sage, Nor scorned to heed Uranias word, Who whispered in their mortal ear That souls with mates whove gone before May reunite at Heavens door. The other way, descending, wide, Appeals to those who neer denied Their selfish instincts fullest vent. The cunning witchery of its glare Entrances such imprudent souls And lures them to the tempters den, Where spear-tailed demons lie in wait To sting them with satanic hate. Decoying snares will hither entice All those enslaved to greed and vice: Here once a zealous bookworm strayed In quest of some forbidden tome And venturing far, he lost his way Amid the crowds and mystic paths Of this delusive devils maze, Where sunless skies cast withering rays. But no Icarian fool was he, Like that one in Mythology Who sought with waxen wings to fly. The un re generate compositor who originally get this line came near impugning the integrity of this abstemious Bookworm and adding to the perils of his misadventure by a confusion of...
