Herbert, who knew the relation between them, involuntarily lifted his eyebrows as he took up his pen. You are thinking it strange, said Mr. Lyster, that I should have anything to say to Mr. Roden at a time like this. But when one is dying one clings, as if one was drowning, to straws. When I am gone, Clare will be absolutely without a counsellor. It had been my hope that you yourself Herbert shook his head. No, sir. I should be of no use in that way; indeed, I should be worse than useless. Any interference of mine would be resented excessively. No doubt--though not, I am sure, by Clare, answered the other earnestly. He had had in his mind quite another hope respecting Herbert; but it was just as well that he had been thus prevented from attending to it. Perhaps the other read his thoughts in his face, for the pen trembled in his hand. Our tender might-have-beens are like the jessamine and the rose, which can turn even strong men sick and faint. What shall I write, sir I have only got the date, December 6th. The sixth Alas, I hoped it was the seventh, murmured the other, unconsciously. Why the seventh Aye, you may well say that, lad, answered the sick man, recovering himself, and calling up a smile. The fancies of a sick man are inexplicable, even to himself. Go on, please, from my dictation:...
