The upper right central was cut off and the root used as an abutment of a bridge which forms part of a splint holding all the uppers rigid. This case required six weeks of treatment. The upper left cuspid in this case suffered from excessive occlusion. Inflammation of the soft tissues about it resulted and involved the other anterior teeth. Same case as above. The excessive occlusion was temporarily relieved by grinding, and the inflammation reduced by treatment. The patient was then referred to an orthodontist for permanent correction of the malocclusion. Same case as above. The excessive occlusion was relieved. The office and home treatments were as given in the text. Inflammation of the soft tissues resulting from the deposit of salivary calculus beneath the free margin of the gums. This case represents a very common beginning of true pyorrhoeal conditions. Same case as above three weeks later. The deposits were removed and proper home treatment instituted. Extensive inflammation resulting from salivary deposits. This condition was common about 31 teeth. Teeth too sensitive to permit mastication. Pus flow in large quantities from about every tooth. Every tooth loose in its socket. Same case five weeks later. The tissues are healthy. The soreness is gone from the teeth. Pus flow has entirely ceased. The teeth have become firm in their sockets. THE GREATEST THING IN ORAL HYGIENE By George Wood Clapp, D.D.S., New...
